FRONT COVER PHOTO: Delaminated varves, rotated vertically here, courtesy of Douglas Aden, Ohio Department of Natural Resources, Division of Geological Survey. Photo taken 27 June 2016 at 39.258778, -82.825074 at an old railroad cut southeast of Chillicothe, Ohio. Like tree rings, these varves from Proglacial Lake Tight are seasonal layers of sediment—in this case Minford Clay—that formed at the bottom of the lake. See page 57 for the article entitled “A New Map of Pleistocene Proglacial Lake Tight Based on GIS Modeling and Analysis” by James L. Erjavec.
